ANTI - GENOCIDE BILL TALKED OUT IN HOUSE

By Our OWN CORRESPONDENT

OTTAWA (CJN) — The Progressive Conservatives, aided by a lone Social Credit member, talked out Bill C-21 last Friday, July 24, the third Friday debate on the anti-genocide bill to take place in a row.

Despite efforts of Marvin Gelber (L-York South) and Stanley Knowles (NDP Winnipeg North Centre), supported by the Solicitor General and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, several Conservatives followed the dictates of conscience and talked out the Klein-Walker bill.

Mr. Gelber spoke first, making a quiet and moving plea for a law against the preaching or practicing of genocide, a matter which he termed "larger than the problems which are encompassed within this house and our country."

He spoke of "the recent conference of Commonwealth prime ministers (which) ....pursued the diplomacy of active understanding." The right of free speech was won in a society very different from ours, he pointed out, saying "the Socratic approach with which John Stuart Mill was dealing does not reflect the problem of influencing public opinion in our society."

Quoting the late Mr. Justice Rand, formerly dean of the law school of the University of Western Ontario, Mr. Gelber said: "We must accept either the rule of reason or the rule of passion — of hatred."

Mr. Gelber mentioned the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition (Rt. Hon. John Diefenbaker) to the Canadian Jewish Congress that two independent legal opinions be sought on the possibility of prosecuting hate mongers under the Criminal Code. John J. Robinette and Arthur Maloney were consulted and, after examining the relevant sections of the Criminal Code, said they considered the wording inadequate to the circumstances. Common law has regard for relationships between groups, but Mr. Robinette and Mr. Maloney maintain that the common law crime no longer exists within our law because of the Criminal Code.

The Canadian Jewish Congress has suggested the addition of two paragraphs to section 166 of the Code:

"Injury or mischief to a public interest shall include statements intended or calculated for the promotion of hatred, contempt or hostility against a group of persons by reason of their particular race, nationality or ethnic origin, colour or religion."

"No person shall be convicted of an offence under this section by reason only of having published statements relating to controversial social, economic, political or religious beliefs or opinions."

Mr. Gelber also quoted the proposed change in section 153, enlarging the meaning of the word "scurrilous" to read "material, a principal purpose of which is to promote hatred of or hostility against a group of persons by reason of their

JACK BLANC

DRIVE LAUNCHED FOR SUPPORT OF HERO'S FAMILY

Last Friday afternoon, July 24, Jack Blanc, a Jewish war veteran, who had not only served Canada for six years (mostly overseas) but had served his own Jewish people in the Israeli War of Independence, gave up his life. His never-ending fight against gangsterism and banditry in all its forms ended in the supreme sacrifice.

In delivering the funeral eulogy, Rabbi David Monson, chaplain of the General Wingate branch of the Royal Canadian Legion of which Jack Blanc was a member, said:

"To Jack Blanc it was natural to stand up against gangsterism and hoodlumism, to fight to preserve law and order. He was a true Maccabean.

"Unlike others, he naturally obeyed the biblical injunction to be his brother's keeper."

At the burial grounds, members of the General Wingate branch, composed largely of Jewish ex-servicemen, with the assistance of numerous non-Jewish veterans, provided one of the most moving military funerals in Canadian history.

Allan Perly, president of the Legion Branch, called on the community to provide through legislation a means of recompense, at least financially, to such citizen defenders of law and order.

Mr. Perly is making an urgent appeal to all members of the Jewish community to assist in providing relief for the straitened circumstances of the late Jack Blanc's diabetic widow Sally, and for the continued education of his 15-year old son Stanley, by making contributions to the Jack Blanc Family Fund, c/o General Wingate Branch, Royal Canadian Legion, 1610 Bathurst St., Toronto.

Senator David A Croll, Q. C. will serve as honorary treasurer of the Jack Blanc Family Fund and Rabbi David Monson of Beth Sholom synagogue will serve as honorary secretary.

SPIRITUAL INDEPENDENCE

JERUSALEM. — A new term was coined last weekend at the World Congress of the orthodox Agudat Israel now in session here. Rarely does one find in the Holy City an echo of the voices traditionally associated with Jerusalem. One of the few original ideas that impressed me was the plea Reb Itshe Meir Levine made for Israel's "spiritual independence" during his address at the opening session of the Knessia Gedola.

Literally thousands gathered at Jerusalem's Convention Hall, the crowd over-flowing well outside, to listen to the leaders expound what Torah Jews call a "new word." And THIS they heard.

Rabbi Levine, a former Cabinet minister and now leader of the Agudat Israel in the Knesset, defined the difference which separates traditional Jewish thinking from non-Jewish influences.

The patriarch implied that religious Jews living in Israel — and those outside the Holy City — are equally impressed by the tremendous economic and political progress of the State of Israel. At the same time, however, they are concerned by the fact that the majority of the country's political leaders (not in the orthodox fold) apparently do not realize the urgent need for some sort of cultural renaissance which would spell the complete spiritual sovereignty of the Jew in the reborn state.

The Rabbi inferred that economic and political growth do not determine the success of a people like Israel. Though vital, they don't secure the existence of the Jew.

Throughout history the Jew's oft-lonely march frequently has been obstructed, but never broken — solely because of his spiritual independence.

Thus, if Israel is to become a power, its grandeur must be that of the spirit.

Listening to Reb Itshe Meir's speech was an unusual experience, as is the entire Congress which opened with the moving recitation of a psalm, with tears and prayer, with a proclamation of the Jews' uniqueness and determination to remain a people apart.

This mood continues; it is different. For this reason this Congress impresses both friend and opponent. It is a meeting where the image of the historic Jew challenging economic and political facts is revived.

And this is Agudat Israel. It claims that nothing has changed since Sinai. No programs, no books, no theories produced during the past thousands of years are relevant when confronted with Torah.

KREMLIN RELENTS: MOSCOW CHIEF RABBI CAN TRAVEL

By M. J. Nurenberger

JERUSALEM (CJN)—The Aguda policy of extreme tact on the question of Soviet treatment of Jewish citizens has paid off.

For the first time since he assumed office, Moscow's Chief Rabbi Yehuda Leib Levine is to be permitted to participate in Jewish religious international meetings abroad.

The sensational revelation was made at the conclusion of the World Agudat Israel congress here by the head of the North American Aguda, Dr. Isaac Lewin, who is a professor at Yeshiva University, New York City.

REJECT OPEN PROTEST

It came following the debate of the steering committee of Knessia Gedola where most representatives dissociated themselves from a policy of open protest against treatment of Jews by the Soviet government.

The Agudat Israel congress agreed on a policy of diplomacy and careful nonalignment with other Jewish organizations involved in politics.

POLICY BEARS FRUIT

Dr. Lewin then told surprised delegates that Aguda policy had born valuable fruit in the permission granted by the Soviet government to Rabbi Yehuda Leib Levine to participate in future European conferences of Agudat Israel when religious matters only are discussed.

SOVIET SIDE OPEN MINDED

In an exclusive interview, Dr. Lewin told The Canadian Jewish News that the Aguda policy of dealing with Soviet authorities on religious matters exclusively was being met on the Soviet side by openmindedness.

"Aguda will not be involved in power politics," Dr. Lewin said, Jewish interests are purely religious, he continued, and secular Jewish organizations fail because they engage in different political activities.

Bonn Doubles "Hardship Fund"

FROM THE WEST GERMAN BULLETIN

With a final amendment to the Federal Compensation Law, the Parliament and the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany have taken another considerable step in making amends—insofar as is possible, in a material sense—for Nazi wrongs. The Federal Compensation Law is the law that provides for the allocation of payments to persons who suffered material losses through persecution by the Nazis.

The present amendment, which is the third, was unanimously passed by the Bundestag in its second and third readings.

In the course of this parliamentary procedure, the "hardship fund", already provided for in the Government's draft, was raised from DM 400,000,000 to DM 800,000,000 ($200,000,000).

The provisions contained in the amendment represent the conclusion of an import ant sector of restitution legislation. It will now be possible to give greater consideration to those formerly persecuted persons who were unable, for one reason or another, to apply for compensation before the previously stipulated deadline. At the same time, the action of the Bundestag clarifies the situation for the Government as regards the expenditures to be expected for the budget.

The finance Minister, Rolf Dahlgrün, termed the amend ment "a worthy keystone" for the restitution laws. The Federal Republic restitution payments, he said would ultimately amount to a sum of about DM 40,000,000,000 ($10,000,000,000). The Minister added that his Government has always regarded its debt in this respect as a point of honour, regarding the human and moral aspects as predominate. Thus, he said, priority has always been given to the attempt to right the wrongs of the past as far as possible, even though in full awareness that it will never be possible to make amends for all the evil done.

The day after the amendment was passed, the Frankfurter Allgemeine commented:

"We should be conscious of the fact that it has taken us more than 20 years to make amends—to the extent that that can be done with money at all. Nevertheless, it cannot be said of the Federal Republic that it did not do everything in its power to make up for the evil committed in our name. A sum of 40,000,000,000 Marks is no small burden for a people. But we should not let it be an irksome burden, if we expect the world not to reproach us with the past."

The Jewish weekly Allgemeine Wochenzeitung der Juden in Deutschland termed the amendment "an expression of the will to make amends" and "a noteworthy performance, not easy for any finance minister, no matter of what political party".

The comment continued: "Without doubt, the passing of the amendment was evidence of the will to re-establish justice—a will that should have its effect in other spheres of restitution as well. One should be careful not to depart from the straight road of objectivity through certain kinds of articles or reports marked by sensationalism. A level-headed examination of the real facts must make apparent to all objective observers that in the sphere of restitution the Federal Republic has made very earnest and effective efforts. The impossibility of making complete amends is due to the extent of the persecution that took place."

ALL HOT FOR SKI HOLIDAY

JERUSALEM (JCNS) — Officials at Lydda Airport were amazed last Sunday at the sight of a young Frenchman emerging from the aircraft muffled in a woolen scarf and gloves and carrying skis.

He said that he came for a holiday at the French camp at Ashkelon and that someone in his home town had told him that there was a skiing resort in the mountains at Ashkelon.

The would-be skier was suprised to learn that Ashkelon was situated in the coastal plain and that the temperature there this week was 86 degrees.

WHEN THIEVES FALL OUT ...

Nazi Sues Nazi As Thief

LONDON (JCNS) — Colin Jordan, self-styled leader of Britain's National Socialist Movement, told the magistrate at Marylebone Court that John Tyndall, the former secretary of the group, had stolen £40 of his (Jordan's) money from his private office in Notting Hill, London.

The money, he told the magistrate, was in a cabinet in the group's headquarters, to which only he and Tyndall had a key.

Tyndall was committed on bail for trial at London Sessions.

Until May, Jordan said, Tyndall had worked under him as secretary but had then been expelled and had attempted to start his own movement.

Tyndall said in court: "I am not guilty. I submit that this charge is wilfully false and libellous and forms the subject for a case of malicious prosecution which I shall consider bringing at a later date."

RIGA JEWS TARGET OF ATTACK

LONDON (JCNS) — An article in the latest issue of the Soviet publication "Nauka i Religia" (Science and Religion) entitled "Restrictions on Memorial Grounds", complains that Orthodox Jews still object to the burial of Gentiles in the Jewish cemetery in Riga.

The author, Gerodnik, urges the Soviet authorities to "free completely the resting grounds from the authority of religious tradition.." He complains that despite the fact that the Riga Jewish cemetery was expropriated as long ago as 1956, only one-quarter of the burials there are held without religious rites.

The article, therefore, reveals that the restriction on seperate Jewish burial is not merely a local one but is part of a general policy of the Soviet central authorities.

BETH SHOLOM ISRAEL BOND COMMITTEES HOLD PLANNING DINNER: Members of Beth Sholom Congregation's Israel Bond Committee, as well as representatives of the Men's Club, the Sisterhood and the Young Married Club, participated in the Pre-Campaign Planning Dinner held at the Synagogue on July 21st. D. Lou Harris, National Chairman of the State of Israel Bond Organization of Canada, delivered the major address of the evening, paying high tribute to the leadership of Beth Sholom in being the first Congregation in Canada to devote a synagogue service for a Bond Appeal. Harry Polevoy, Israel Bond Chairman for 1964, outlined the campaign plan whereby Committee members will supervise special contact teams to canvass every member-family at Beth Sholom. Congregation Chairman Henry Donsky urged the cooperation of all organizations within the framework of the congregation's activities, to play an active and vigorous role in the Bond Campaign so that the 1964 target of $350,000 would be achieved — a 50% increase over last year's total.
As a result of several day's canvassing, many pledges have already been secured by Committee members who took cards, and in the majority of cases, significant increases have become a marked trend.

PASTERNAK TO CHAIR UJA GOLF DAY AUG. 20

Irwin Pasternak has been appointed chairman of the fourth annual United Jewish Appeal Good Fellowship Golf Day, it was announced by Theodore D. Richmond, 1964 UJA campaign chairman.

The event will be held on Thursday, August 20 at Huntington Golf and Country Club, and all UJA campaign workers will be invited to join in the day's fun.

In announcing the appointment, Mr. Richmond noted that Mr. Pasternak has been active for a number of years in the UJA Barristers Group and has played an important role in the Leadership Development Program of the United Jewish Welfare Fund. He also is a member of the board of directors of the United Jewish Welfare Fund.

Mr. Pasternak said that "everything possible" would be done to make this year's Golf Day "the most enjoyable ever." As a member of Huntington, he added that the host club is "happy to extend its hospitality to participants in the United Jewish Appeal campaign."

Mr. Pasternak said that although the main event of the day would be the UJA Golf Tournament, UJA workers who are non-golfers also should consider coming out, since the club's pool and other facilities would be open to all.

Members of the Golf Day committee and the program for the day will be announced shortly, he concluded.

FARBAND BOND WORKERS ROLL UP THEIR SLEEVES! Ignoring the heat wave, members of the Farband Labour Zionist Movement Israel Bond Committee met at the home of J. J. Zweig, for an intensive campaign planning session which established the pattern of activities for the coming Campaign. The High Holy Day Appeal will take place on the first day of Rosh Hashonah, and a thorough canvass will be undertaken prior to the Appeal so that all advance sales may be announced at the services. Campaigns will be undertaken in all branches of the Farband Movement, under the overall Chairmanship of Louis Gotkind. Negro Anti-Semitism Examined (Part I)

By SHAD POLIER

THE JEW AND THE RACIAL CRISIS

We are in for a period of increasing anti-Semitism among Negroes, and it is important to understand why this is so. It is even more important to understand its significance for the Jewish community. It is most important, however, to understand how the Jewish community should and should not deal with this phenomenon.

The points of friction which provoke and exacerbate Negro anti - Semitism are obvious enough. The relationship of landlord and tenant, of shopkeeper and customer in the slum areas, of employer and employee in households and in many marginal industries — all these provide further tinder easily ignited in the superheated atmosphere of the Negro revolution. The resentment and hostility by Negroes against white persons in these dominant positions should come as no surprise to anyone.

Regardless of the merits of the particular landlord, the particular merchant or the particular employer, he represents to the Negro the white exploiter, the white who lives and fattens upon the Negro's helplessness. In striking back — or more accurately — striking out against the Jew, the Negro is assaulting a white world which he believes has short-changed him and which he believes is determined to take advantage of him.

Efforts of the Communists in the depression years of the 1930's to win Negro adherents understandably failed. The Negro is not in revolt against the capitalistic system. He is in revolt against the white community because the whites have denied and are denying him full partnership in that system and its economic and social blessings.

A degree of bitterness naturally inheres in this racial conflict. One of its natural by-products is the Black Nationalist movement. It would be almost inconceivable that this particular form of extremism should not develop under the terrible pressures of a people seeking freedom and equality.

It may perhaps help us Jews to understand this movement. Offhand, we may regard it as utterly alien to Jews. Yet let us remember a phenomenon in recent Jewish history. To the British people, the Stern gang in Israel was no less extremist than the Black Muslims are in the eyes of the American people.

Nor does it change matters to say that the Stern gang was fighting for political freedom, or that it was fighting to open the doors so that tens and even hundreds of thousands of Jews who had survived the hell of Nazism could enter into the promised land. The Negroes are also fighting for entry into a promised land and to escape the degradation and deprivations of second-class citizenship.

The Jews of Israel repudiated the Stern gang and placed their trust in the Haganah. So, too, the overwhelmingly majority of the Negroes of America repudiate Elijah Mohamed and Malcolm X, his former disciple and now the would-be prophet of Negro nationalism. Instead, the American Negro turns for leadership and places his trust in the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, in the NAACP, in CORE, in the Urban League, in the Student Non - Violent Coordinating Committee.

None of these organizations is tainted with anti-Semitism at the national level. On the contrary, as national organizations they are profoundly concerned over the development of anti-Semitism. They realize the corrosive and negative consequences of anti - Semitism among Negroes. Their national leaders — the responsive heads of the Negro struggle for civil rights — are fully aware of the Jewish contribution to that struggle, and the tragic consequences that would result if Negro and Jew were to be pitted against one another.

Negro anti-Semitism, like anti-Semitism elsewhere, is essentially the result of a search for a scapegoat, for someone upon whom the Negro's sense of frustration can be vented. Certainly it should come as no surprise that anti-Semitism is seized upon by Negro demagogues who employ it in their unprincipled fight to achieve and hold positions of leadership in local communities.

If these local leaders offered their members nothing more than anti - Semitism they would, of course, be vulnerable to action by their national leadership. Indeed, if their local activities consisted only of anti-Semitism there would be no need for intervention by national leaders. Their own constituents would soon recognize the emptiness and futility of such programs.

The difficulty arises out of the fact that many of these local leaders have also wrapped themselves in a cloak of militancy. They have advocated programs going far beyond what their national leaders believe sound or wise or productive. In so doing they have sought to 'out-militate' national leadership.

In my view, Negro anti-Semitism is neither pervasive nor is it likely to be enduring. Like Black Nationalism, it touches only a tiny fraction of Negroes. Like Black Nationalism it is, I believe, a passing phase. I would characterize both Negro anti-Semitism and Back Nationalism as sterile concepts offering only blind alleys leading to nowhere. I am confident that the Negro will recognize that this is the case.

I do not dismiss Negro anti-Semitism. But I am equally concerned lest Jews react to it by alienating themselves from the struggle for racial justice.

Jews can point to the fact that their national organizations have joined together with all of the other liberal forces in this country to secure the enactment of anti-discrimination legislation. We can point to the fact that in the fight for the enactment of an adequate Federal civil rights bill Jewish organizations have been among the important voices supporting such legislation. We can point to the fact that those Jews who have abused their positions as landlords, as merchants or as employers have acted no differently from any other white persons.

It is important that Jews point to these things. But it is equally important for Jews to realize that it will take time for these things to be seen by Negroes and to be listened to by Negroes. What troubles me is the danger that the individual Jew will become bitter, that he will become hostile, that he will divorce himself from the great struggle which is not a Negro struggle but an American struggle — the great struggle for human equality and human dignity.

Such bitterness, hostility and alienation can only be self-defeating. It can serve only to fuel the fires of anti-Semitism. Out of that crucible will pour anti-Negroism, a product no less terrible than anti-Semitism. The victim will not be the Negro, he will be the Jew — corrupted and scarred because he will have forsaken the most precious precepts of his religion.

I am concerned lest these things happen to the Jew. I have faith that they will not happen. I have faith because I believe that, given insight and understanding, the Jew will not betray his heritage.

There is one aspect of the racial crisis which, it seems to me, may become the touchstone of the Jewish response to the Negro struggle for full equality and dignity.

Education deficit campaign

Opening dinner August 11

The Opening Dinner and Rally of the Jewish Education Deficit Campaign will be held on Tuesday, August 11 at the Associated Hebrew School Auditorium, Bathurst Street and Neptune Drive, it was announced this week by Joseph Levine, chairman.

A campaign goal of $310,000 will be announced at the rally, according to Mr. Levine. The drive is being sponsored by the United Jewish Welfare Fund to meet the current deficits of the eighteen all-day and afternoon schools which are subsidized by the Welfare Fund.

Dr. Samuel Hurwich of Jerusalem, formerly of Toronto, will be guest speaker at the rally. Harry Korolnek, a vice-chairman of the campaign, will be the chairman of the evening.

Reporting on the progress of preliminary steps in the campaign, Mr. Levine said that the response "has been heart-warming."

"Despite the fact that many people are away on holiday, many generous pledges have already been received, and hundreds of cards have been distributed for coverage," he declared. "Many community leaders have volunteered to work, and the boards of directors and memberships of the various schools are participating."

Schools benefitting from the campaign are:

Associated Hebrew Schools: Junior Day High School; Toronto Hebrew Day School; Shaarei Shomayim Talmud Torah; North Bathurst Talmud Torah; Beth Emeth Bais Yehudah Talmud Torah; Beach Hebrew Institute; Bialik Hebrew Day School; Borochov Schools — two branches.

Eitz Chaim Schools: All-Day School; Junior Day High School; D'Arcy Talmud Torah; Viewmount Talmud Torah.

Jewish Folk School: Mildred Arnoff Memorial School (Beth Sholom); Toronto Hebrew High School; Workmen's Circle Peretz School; Yeshiva Shlomei Emunei Israel.

In a statement on the purposes of the campaign, Mr. Levine noted, as an example,

THE BASIS OF THE ISRAELI CLAIM

By DR. WALTER CLAY LOWDERMILK

Originator explains Jordan water plan

The following analysis of the Jordan River waters issue is published by The Canadian Jewish News in two installments, the second to appear in a later issue. Both installments represent a slightly abbreviated version of a lecture delivered by its author earlier this year to a Toronto group (see picture).

Why have the sacred waters of the Jordan become "hot" politically. Unfortunately, what really concerns the Arab states is not Israel's diversion of a portion of Jordan waters which flow within her own borders, and to which she has riparian rights, but the existence of Israel itself, which they refuse to recognize. They claim that since Israel does not exist, she has no claim to water.

Since the defeat of five attacking Arab nations by Israel in 1948 and again defeating Egypt in Sinai in 1956, the Arabs have used various forms of harassment, such as: complete economic boycott, closure of the Suez Canal to Israel shipping, black listing of ships carrying cargo to or from Israel, and fedaheen raids, which killed hundreds of Israelis in hit and run tactics and have carried on vociferous and continuous vicious propaganda.

The Arab States have sought to stifle Israel's food production and thereby limit immigration, by preventing her use of Jordan waters, even though she has riparian rights to them.

BEGAN OVER A DECADE AGO

This harassment began in the early 50's when Israel first drafted her plan to divert Jordan waters according to the Master Water Plan, above Lake Tiberias at Bnai Yacov Bridge in Israel's demilitarized zone. This location would have enabled Israel also to operate a hydro-electric power station and remove fresh waters of the Jordan before being contaminated by salt springs in Lake Tiberias.

With concerted, powerful and threatening propaganda the Arabs took this to the Security Council, pending an inquiry. Israel refused, but heavy outside pressure forced her to stop work.

After much loss of time and money, Israel decided to pump water for the national conduit from Lake Tiberias, which lies entirely within Israel territory. But this deprives her of hydro power, and forces her to pump up 800 ft. the more salty water of the lake.

Now, Israel has almost completed this brilliantly engineered Master Water Plan. The Arab States erroneously claim this 108" pipe line of water from the Jordan to the Negev would enable Israel to increase her immigration by several million and therefore this makes Israel an aggressor and justifies Arab States to take action against her, to destroy her.

Actually, Jordan waters would only irrigate some 200,000 acres and much less, after cities and industries enroute south use water from the pipe line.

As you know, Gamel Nasser of Egypt called the heads of states of 12 other Arab states to Cairo to work out a unified strategy against Israel. Although the desire to crush Israel seems the only unifying force among Arabs, and they have promised her destruction, they did not declare war as expected.

NO ARAB WATER SHORTAGE

However, they formed a joint military command, to which all would contribute, but announced that it was not necessary to fight Israel at this time for by Easter, 1966, Egypt's scientists will have manufactured sufficient missiles to destroy Israel before the United Nations or others could step in to save her. This announcement is disturbing, for Nasser has many thousands of Nazis in his employ in Egypt.

The determination, at any cost to themselves, to thwart Israel of Jordan waters does not arise from a short supply in surrounding lands. Syria, in the Euphrates river alone has 30 times the volume of the Jordan and her Orontes River has 3 times the volume of the total Jordan tributaries. Besides it has many springs bursting out from the limestone slopes of Mt. Hermon, almost 10,000 feet in height, and extensive underground water reserves in Eastern Syria.

Lebanon's Litany River flows 80 percent unused into the Mediterranean. She also has the Yarmuk River, which is the border between her and Syria and which has small streams.

The Kingdom of Jordan has many fine springs and the same volume as the Jordan River flowing out of Israel. But besides, there are numerous springs and streams which give Jordan considerably more water available for use than is found in Israel.

So the 40 percent of Jordan water allocated to Israel under the Johnson plan is in no way robbing Arab States of waters needed for development of irrigation. Syria, the most vociferous of all, has water resources in eastern Syria to maintain millions more people with a good standard of living, if she would make full use of waters flowing within her borders and in her underground water aquifers.

WHAT ABOUT THE JORDAN ITSELF

Now let us take a quick look at this Jordan River which has become such a critical political issue. The Jordan itself, from its source in the Huleh to its delta in the Dead Sea, as the crow flies, is only 80 miles long and for most of its length, flows below Sea level in the deepest portion of the "Great Rift" extending from Africa to Turkey. However, it twists and coils in a green jungle making its meandering length some 200 miles.

The sources of the Jordan are three great springs. The Dan rises in Israel with double the flow of the Hesbani rising over the border in Lebanon and the Banyas, coming from Syria. All three converge into the former papyrus swamplands of Lake Huleh, now drained by Israel and made into a little Agricultural Paradise of some 45,000 acres, except for a small swamp and lake left for a wild life refuge. It is 230 feet above sea level and lies entirely within Israel.

Leaving the Huleh as one stream, the Jordan first plunges down a narrow channel for a fall of 910 feet in 9 miles to the sea of Galilee, now called Tiberias, which is 680 feet below sea level. Like the Huleh, this sacred sea is also entirely within Israel.

Four miles south of Tiberias, the Jordan from Israel, receives a tributary of equal volume, the Yarmuk River, which is the border between Syria and the Kingdom of Jordan. With the assistance of the United States, Jordan is in the process of unilaterally diverting these waters on the east side of the river for irrigation. Israel did not challenge this, though she has riparian rights to some of this water. Jordan plans to take all of the Yarmuk waters by construction of a high dam.

At present, Jordan fresh waters finally reach the bitter brine of the Dead Sea, 1290 feet below sea level. This concentrated brine pickles the Jordan's fresh water fish and we found we could not sink in it.

In Israel, where more and more souls are crowding a scant water supply, there is tragic need to develop, conserve and dispense all the waters available to Israel. Israel's largest export crop, citrus, requires three feet of water for irrigation aside from rainfall. To produce one pint of milk requires 120 gallons of water, mostly for fodder. To process one yard of woollen cloth requires 510 gallons. Israel claims industrial use of water produces 30 times the value in finished articles than is obtained by agricultural uses of water. Yet her population, now going into its third million, must have both food and export.

The new State of Israel recognized this urgency for more water and worked out a Master Water Plan, which now, after 10 years of investigation, study and work of many experts, is almost completed. This Master Plan coordinates and integrates all the water resources of the country into a comprehensive country-wide network which collects water, wherever it is available, and distributes it to the areas where it is needed. The Jordan-Negev system is the central link — the nerve centre of Israel's National Water Plan.

I am asked — "Will this costly network of pipes be able to supply all of the Negev's water needs?". Certainly not. Israel's water consumption all over the country, in village, town and city is rising faster than new water resources can be found. Israel must use every available possibility of water —by cloud seeding, by desalination of sea water and brackish water of which Israel has considerable amounts in the south, and she is looking forward to using atomic energy for huge plans. Israel must make full development of her underground water supplies and conservation of her flood waters, rectification of sewage waters for irrigation and, very important, Israel must have her 40 percent of Jordan waters as allocated to her under the Johnson negotiations.

DR. WALTER C. LOWDERMILK, father of the Jordan River development scheme to "make the deserts bloom", one of the world's great soil conservationists and professor emeritus of the Technion - Israel Institute of Technology, addressing over 400 members of the Canadian Technion Society — Toronto Chapter and their guests at a recent special program in Toronto.

WHO IS DR. LOWDERMILK?

Dr. Walter Clay Lowdermilk is the world's most outstanding authority on soil conservation and land reclamation. He recently completed a tour of duty in Israel, where he served as a special U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization representative, directing the Department of Agricultural Engineering of the Technion-Israel Institute of Technology in Haifa. When he left the Technion, he was named a Professor Emeritus of the Agricultural Engineering Department.

It was as assistant chief of the Soil Conservation Service of the U.S. Department of Agriculture that Professor Lowdermilk first visited Palestine. Stirred by what he had seen there, he wrote a best-selling book, "Palestine-Land of Promise." His book provided the first draft of his proposal for a Jordan Valley Authority, also known as the "Lowdermilk Plan," and parts of this plan have been put into effect by the Israeli government. Shortly after the creation of the State of Israel he returned there to advise in problems of soil conservation.

Born in North Carolina in 1888, the rugged-faced scientist graduated from the University of Arizona, receiving a Rhodes Scholarship to Oxford. He began his professional career as an assistant forest ranger in the Tonto National Forest of Arizona, and during World War I served with Herbert Hoover on the Commission for Belgian Relief. When the United States declared war he volunteered for service with the American Expeditionary Forces in France. Following the Armistice he served with the American-French Liquidation Commission on timber settlements with the French government.

In 1933, when President Roosevelt authorized formation of a soil conservation service, Dr. Lowdermilk helped organize and direct the national program. Under his direction, the new Agricultural Engineering Department of Technion has grown and now offers to Israel advanced scientific instruction in agricultural engineering, encompassing farm power and machinery, rural electrification, soil and water conservation, flood control and rural structures, and settlement planning.

We don't know how to tell you this, but all transatlantic jet fares are the same.

Including all those reduced rates you may have read about recently.

We'd like to say we're cheapest, but we can't. No one can. All airlines have exactly the same jet fares to the same cities. They always did. Only now they're cheaper. Including El Al's.

Starting April 1, all transatlantic jet fares come down. Ours. Theirs. Everybody's. So your travel agent was right all along—you're wasting time looking for that exclusive low jet price you thought you saw in an ad. It doesn't exist.

But this fact does: While everything else gets more expensive, flying costs you less than ever before. Regardless of the carrier.

So how do you pick an airline? Extra touches. Convenience. For instance, you could drop in on your travel agent and say, "I want to take an economy group fare trip to Israel for $535 round trip from New York including stopover in Europe on the way back. Who flies it?" And he will say, "Seventeen airlines. But El Al does it twice as often." Now that's convenience. And what a bargain. Want to hear more? Visit your friendly local travel agent. Or El Al. And remember, we're no cheaper than anyone else.

THE JEWISH VOTE

GOLDWATER AND ISRAEL

Political parties do not always do as much as their platform promises, particularly in the American political tradition, but they have never been known to do more. This makes the coolness towards Israel of the Republican Party platform significant. The Jewish vote, whatever its reality, is sought after by all American politicians, and promises of aid and support for Israel are a traditional way of seeking this. But the Republican Party, now under the influence of Senator Goldwater and his extremists of the South, South-West, Mid-West and West Coast, is far less promising than any previous platform. This is known to reflect the views of many of the radical right. The prominent Jewish and pro-Israeli members of the Republican Party, mainly from the East Coast, who constitute its liberal wing, have been decisively defeated at this year's Republican convention. Given the notoriously pro-Arab bias of many permanent State Department officials, the platform gives cause for concern.

U. N. IN THE MIDEAST

WHEN THE SYRIANS ARE RIGHT

Unnatural though it is, it also is unusual for a Jewish newspaper to state that the Syrians are right. However, we cannot help but agree with one of the Syrian army leaders who refused to accept a protest several days ago from the United Nations Mixed Armistice Commission concerning a border incident with Israel.

This time the Syrian echoed probably what most Israelis feel about certain aspects of the U. N. role on the borders of Israel.

Rarely does a day go by without some kind of provocation on the part of the Syrian army or individual Syrian soldiers. In fact, some of these incidents are more serious than they appear on the surface. Good men, innocent soldiers, are wounded — sometimes badly.

Then what follows? Israel protests to the United Nations Commission; the United Nations Commission investigates; finally it issues a report — blaming both for playing with fire.

Several weeks ago a clear breach of peace on the part of Syria took place. Had the Israelis not decided to remain calm and cool, a serious conflict would have developed.

Here too the U. N. Commission blamed both sides. Israel officially protested this impartiality in judging both the aggressor and the victim, but to no avail.

Syrians know that the U. N. will remain neutral — at the expense of justice.

We sincerely believe that the time has come for Canada — a staunch supporter of the United Nations, a country which has contributed so much to the prestige of this international organization — to save it from disgrace in the Middle East. The United Nations, at least, ought speak up in defense of peace and order.

"Look, Ma, its a Jewish animal!"

"What makes you say that?" asked Mama.

MISERY LOVES COMPANY

During Sunday's dinner, Mrs. Epstein complained of a severe headache. Sympathetic little Deena tried to console her.

"Mommy, we were told in Sunday School that Moses also had a headache."

"Who said so," asked Mother.

"Teacher," came the reply. "She said God gave Moses two tablets."

IN ONE EAR, OUT THE OTHER

The rabbi was addressing an advanced class at Sunday School on the subject of Jewish ceremonies. During the course of his talk, he noticed that one of the boys was reading a book. This annoyed the rabbi.

"Sheldon," he asked, "what are you doing? Aren't you learning something?"

"No sir,' answered Sheldon. "I'm not learning anything. I'm listening to you."

KYCHKO CONDEMNED

U.S. COMMUNISTS RAP SOVIET ANTISEMITISM

"Political Affairs," the theoretical organ of the Communist Party of the United States, in its June number, published the first of two editorial articles on the problem of "Soviet antisemitism" in the light of "Judaism Unmasked", the viciously antisemitic book published by the Ukrainian Academy of Science.

The article is remarkable in being the first important Communist admission that antisemitism is a problem in the Soviet Union and that Jews experience religious discrimination.

The journal bluntly condemns Trofim Kychko's book as "a crude and disgraceful piece of antisemitic literature." It goes on to say: "That such a book could appear at all in a socialist country is cause for serious concern. That it could appear in the garb of a 'scientific' document under the aegis of an academy of science is all the more disturbing.... In our opinion, it cannot be simply dismissed as an isolated incident, as a result of carelessness or failure to treat the question seriously by those involved.

"On the contrary, the book's appearance reflects the continued existence of antisemitic ideas and influence among individuals within the Soviet Union. This conclusion is given added weight by the fact that the present instance is not unique. In recent years there have been other books and articles containing antisemitic references or statements indicative at the very least of a lack of sensitivity towards the question."

IDEOLOGICAL WAR

The lesson of the Kychko book, said the Communist journal, was that relentless ideological war against national and racial prejudice was needed. "It is, we believe, an unjustified feeling that the fight is over, and consequently an inclination to continued expressions of antisemitism and a failure to see the need for an open campaign to eradicate every vestige of it, that account for the appearance of such monstrosities as 'Judaism Unmasked'."

"Political Affairs" flatly rejects the idea that criticism of the Jewish religion, or of Zionism, is in itself antisemitism. Kychko's offence was to identify "religious obscurantism and the reactionary role of Zionism" with the Jews as a people.

The article denies that the Soviet government singles out the Jewish religion "for special repression". But the small size of the Jewish religious community in comparison with, for example, the Greek Orthodox, transforms "this very equality of treatment.... in practice" to inequality. "For while the Greek Orthodox Church can manage to provide for its needs in the way of religious articles, the synagogues cannot, and are therefore deprived of access to such things as tallesim, telifin and prayer books.

"The crude anti-religionism which pervades much of the current anti-religious propaganda and the failure to appreciate the special situation of the Jewish religion in this respect are, we believe, central factors in explaining seemingly pointless actions as the creation of difficulties in securing matzos for the Passover...."

NO MORE MERE ECHO

In general, the editorial article in "Political Affairs" illustrates the important development which has taken place in Western Communist parties since the outcry over the Kychko book.

For a long time Western Communists merely echoed Soviet assurances that antisemitism did not and could not exist in the U.S.S.R., and that there could be no discrimination against Judaism. Now they recognize the ineffectiveness of such assurances and are openly voicing their concern over the difficult situation still confronting Jews in the Soviet Union.

Letters to the Editor

KNEW ILSE DAVIDSOHN'S FATHER

Dear Editor:

In your otherwise very pertinent report on Ilse Stanley's book "The Unforgotten" you refer to the author's father as the new "rabbi" of the new temple. I happen to have known Ilse Davidsohn's distinguished father very well, because he was a friend of my parents, officiated at my own confirmation services at the same synagogue and was even an illustrious guest at the big celebration in our home. Magnus Davidsohn was the chief cantor of the Fasanenstrasse synagogue, and endowed with a wonderful voice. In this capacity, he contributed a great deal to the beauty of the religious services at the Fasanenstrasse synagogue, which became, by his extraordinary talent, a unique musical experience. (His brother was a well-known opera singer.) That's why people all over Berlin came to listen to Magnus Davidsohn, who was also a great expert in Jewish synagogue music and its history, but never a rabbi.

The principal rabbi of the Fasanenstrasse synagogue was another famous man, namely Dr. Leo Baeck, who won world fame by his resistance to the Nazis and his attitude at the Theresienstadt Camp. (I have just published an essay about him in the B'nai B'rith book Great Jewish Thinkers of the 20th Century, where I describe, like Ilse Davidsohn-Stanley, the extraordinary role of German Jewry in the framework of German culture.

NASSER INTERVIEWED BY THE "OBSERVER"

By REVEREND DR. JAMES PARKES

Israel belongs as a Middle East nation

President Nasser has just made the pages of the "London Observer" in an interview with Robert Stephens and Patrick Seale. The caption to the photograph of a tired man is "twelve years of power have left their mark."

But twelve years of change have not made any mark on his attitude to Israel — "the Arabs will not accept the 'status quo' over Palestine at all. We may not be able to do anything to change it today or tomorrow, but the 'status quo' is impossible...

Palestinians were expelled from their territory and must one day return."

The interview followed a week in which successful meetings of Premier Eshkol were in the headlines in New York and Paris. So far as reports go, the complaints of the one, and the triumph of the other, might have taken place twelve years ago

But surely there has been a fundamental change in the position of Israel "vis à vis" the Arab world, a change which completely invalidates the complaints of Nasser, and which would have given an impregnable strength to the arguments of Eshkol. In the interval Israel has unexpectedly become statistically a Middle Eastern country, not by the growth of its Arab minority or the birth rate of its sabras, but by the immigration of Jews from all over the Middle East.

NATIVES OF MIDDLE EAST

Exact statistics must await the next census, but the ancestors of more than sixty per cent of the Jewish population of Israel have never lived anywhere except in the Middle East since the beginning of recorded history. That, at least, appears to be the fact, both from such figures as come from Israel and from the decline of the Jewish population of all the countries from the Persian Gulf to the Atlantic.

The majority of those who previously lived as minorities scattered in all the countries now called "Arab", are now concentrated in the single area of the State of Israel. But that is a "local" migration, and cannot affect their character as middle-easterners. Moreover it is a change largely brought about by Arab action, legal or popular, which made life intolerable for Jewries as ancient as those of the Yemen, Iraq, Syria or Egypt.

If these figures are correct, they change the right of Israel to exist from the abnormal basis of the special arguments which lay behind the claims of Zionism and the issue of the Balfour Declaration to the normal basis of history and tradition. Though Herzl would have been amazed at it, and though Balfour never envisaged it, Israel exists today in the Middle East on the absolutely normal basis that the majority of its inhabitants are middle-easterners, and have never been anything else.

HARD TO EXAGGERATE

The importance of this turn of events cannot be exaggerated. I meet many influential Gentiles in the universities and churches. They know I am interested in the subject, and so they tell me with enthusiasm that they have just been to Israel. They expatiate on what a marvellous country it is, what miracles Jews have wrought there, and how splendid are their plans for the future. But if I change the perspective from present to past, they are at once embarrassed. "Well, let's not go back over the past", they say. "Israel exists and is strong enough to look after herself, and that's what matters".

It's not enough. It's merely a fair-weather friendship. No country today is immune from a surprise attack. A combination of circumstances might give Nasser a momentary opportunity to cripple and even crush Israel. Then the majority of the non-Jewish world would shrug its shoulders and say "What a pity. It's bad luck for this to happen after they lost all those people under Hitler. But, after all, it 'is' an Arab country, and one couldn't expect the Arabs to overlook an opportunity like that, could one? I don't think there's any call for us to interfere. They ought never to have gone there".

It may be distasteful to accept, but it is nevertheless a fact to be reckoned with that, so far as ordinary opinion is concerned, the ceaseless and expensive Arab propaganda has won the day. The ordinary man believes that a million Arabs were brutally "driven out from their homeland", that Israel is an intrusion in the Middle East and that she remains only by the right of force. He will hold all this while genuinely admiring what the Israelis have done, for he prides himself on being a realist. Israel is there, and so must be accepted as being there. But his deeper thoughts will never be disclosed to an Israeli or another Jew. That would be "bad form". But he doesn't mind telling me,

MRS. PARTINGTON'S MOP

The best I could do myself was to republish the "Five Roots of Israel" from the out-of-print "End of an Exile", and add to it "The Continuity of Jewish Life in the Middle East," given to the Anglo-Israel Association. But by itself it is as much use as Mrs. Partington's mop. If the facts are true, they ought to be continually used, in innumerable different forms, whenever Israeli spokesmen are addressing the non-Jewish world.

They will have no direct effect at present on Arab propaganda — except to produce contradiction and abuse. But they will have considerable effect on pro-Arab opinion, whether in the United Nations, in the World Council of Churches, the Vatican or the world's foreign offices.

TYPICAL

In so many ways Israel is today a typical Middle-Eastern country, with a majority of its population finding it difficult to accept the tempo of modern life, with immense need of both finance and "know how" from outside, with a vital interest in the modernization of agriculture, in particular of the desalination of sea-water. It is not an impossible task to get it into the world's head that here is a country at home with itself and its problems.

I have said that this will have no direct effect "at present" on Arab propaganda. But there is no reason why it should not be of immense importance in the creation of future relations. For the development is unexpected. The founders of Zionism, the first pioneers, the pilot planning, all were European. They meant to build up an ideal European state. Those Middle-Eastern Jews they found in Palestine they regarded as interesting survivals, not as partners. It is, then, possible for Nasser or his successor to say: "We were unalterably opposed to an intrusion of European colonialism into our heartlands. But what has now happened is that there has been an involuntary exchange of population within the Middle-Eastern world. That we can accept."

PARKES LIBRARY 35 YEARS OLD

A JCNFS - CJN FEATURE

A new chapter in the fascinating history of the Parkes Library is about to open with its acquisition by Southampton University, Southampton, England. During the past 35 years it has had a remarkable record of progress and achievements.

The library bears the name of its eminent founder, the Rev. Dr. James Parkes, whose personality has inspired every stage of its development. An Oxford graduate and Anglican clergyman, he was working in Geneva in 1929 for the International Student Service movement when his Christian ideals were affronted by the menace of antisemitism in continental Europe.

Thenceforth he began his life's work of promoting a truer understanding of Jewry in the non-Jewish world.

As he studied the causes of Christian ignorance and prejudices, he felt the need of a specialized collection of books. Wherever he went, from one university to another, he consulted Jewish scholars and bibliographical experts on its formation.

His pro-Jewish activities came to the notice of a Swiss fascist organization called the "Iron Front", which attempted to murder him in Geneva in 1935. He thereupon returned to England with his sense of vocation now fully determined.

Since 1935 Dr. Parkes has lived at Old Hores Manor, in the village of Barley, near Royston, Hertfordshire. During the past 30 years this fifteenth-century manor has housed what has now developed into the far-famed Parkes Library.

Some 5,000 books and 2,000 pamphlets are here collected, comprising six main sections; Judaism, Jewish history, biography, sociology, external contacts and relations, and the Middle East. They are of outstanding importance for furthering research into the nature and causes of antisemitism and the relationship between the Jewish and non-Jewish worlds.

The serene and lovely spot on the London to Cambridge road in which the library is situated was ideally suited to aid the civilizing influences radiating from the activities of the Parkes Library. Even if in a different setting, it is good to know that the library will not be broken up, but will continue its beneficial work under auspices that will ensure increased facilities and extended scope for usefulness.

And even when in retirement in Dorset, it is impossible to imagine that James Parkes will not still be championing the cause of enlightenment by the publication of yet more books and lectures as the ripe fruits of his scholarship and wisdom.

SERMON FOR THE WEEK

PEOPLE MATTER

"As one whom his mother comforteth," we read in this Sabbath's portion from the Prophets," so will I comfort you", and in a flash over two thousand years of history dissolve into nothing. The audience to whom the prophet addressed himself thought, spoke and worshipped differently from ourselves and yet, in one important respect, they and we are on the same level — in respect of human emotions. Mothers comforted their children, then as now, and it is in the area of human needs, if anywhere, that we are on safe ground in asserting that there is an unbroken link between past and present generations.

We are apt to underestimate the importance of this emotional link with the past and to overestimate other more obvious links. Those who speak and write of Judaism today tend to stress the importance of Jewish values and Jewish traditions in the historical complex. They have little, if anything, to say about Jewish emotions. Yet inasmuch as the existence of the world preceded the invention of theoretical physics, and inasmuch as language is spoken before grammar is written, so also the Jewish people existed long before their values and traditions could become articulate — and people have needs, not least spiritual.

If we could but read the book of our history dispassionately, without either the emotionless approach of the scholar or the over emotional approach of the bigot, we will find, at the heart of the matter, the sober truth that people and their needs matter. This explains the development of religious thought in our sacred literature. Values and traditions changed because circumstances and people changed. And the greatest of Jewish genius was always aware, subconsciously if not consciously, of the implications of the fact that people and their needs mattered.

The Jewish people have basic needs today as always. Where we have fallen down in our generation is in our ability always adequately to cater for these needs. One serious difference between past and present is, of course, that formerly changes were not always effected consciously but, rather, instinctively. For better or for worse we are self-conscious and sophisticated.

What we do, unlike our forbears, is done in the full glare of history. We are driven by a whole apparatus of psychological concepts to an ever keener awareness of what we do than was ever possible in an earlier age. This means only that the catering for genuine Jewish needs today is more difficult than heretofore, not that it is no longer necessary; that it requires more courage, not less.

There is a debate today between those who believe that religion should be modified to satisfy more adequately the needs of the Jewish people, and those who believe that the needs of the Jewish people must be modified in order to fit the religion. No one can at present say what the precise outcome will be, but this much can be asserted — insofar as any lesson at all can be learned from Jewish history, when the basic needs of the vast majority of the people are flouted it is religion itself which suffers. We must take from history not only those items which support our deepest convictions but also those items which goad us on to ever greater and more creative achievement.

TURKS REJECT ARAB PRESSURE STRENGTHEN TIES WITH ISRAEL

The Paris meeting between Israel Prime Minister Levi Eshkol and Ismet Inonu, Prime Minister of Turkey, has been noted with warm appreciation in Israel.

In their hour-long meeting the two men discussed the strengthening of co-operation and it is regarded as the best indication yet that the efforts to achieve closed relations between the two countries are being crowned with success.

These efforts have been marked by the exchange of visits and many expressions of mutual regard in recent months, a welcome reversal of the policy in the early fifties when Ankara succumbed to Arab pressure. However, for some time, although not openly expressed, the two governments have been favourably disposed towards each other.

Observers attribute the drastic change in Turkish-Israeli relations to the anti-Turkish stand taken by Nasser over events in Cyprus and the loyalty shown by Israel in spite of her delicate position.

It was Ankara which decided on a change of tactics by turning the spotlight on its friendly ties with Israel. It began with Turkey officially asking for Israeli help in economic planning and with agreements to exchange experts in other fields.

An Israeli team of senior economists and planners has just returned to Jerusalem after studying Turkey's economic planning, investment prospects and development of capital markets, to draw up its recommendations.

The mission penetrated the entire agricultural area of southern Turkey, where the work of the planner is eagerly awaited.

Turkey's low technical standard of land exploitation is regarded as her main deficiency, and it is in this field that she expects Israeli help to be the most useful. If successful, it will raise the standard of living of millions of Turkish peasants.

Co-Operative Ventures

An important agreement provides for Tahal, the Israeli water authority, which planned the National Water Carrier project, to plan the use of Turkey's water resources. Co-operation in improving public transport services in remote parts of Asia Minor is also envisaged.

Before the visit of the Israeli economic team, two Turkish missions came to Israel to study Israeli economic planning. Then Turkish regional governors came to study Israeli local administration, civil servants saw the work of the social services, agricultural engineers visited kibbutzim and foresters investigated Israel's schemes of desert afforestation.

There were also visits by Turkish university professors and a technical assistance mission, headed by Turkish Foreign Ministry official.

Turkey and Israel will co-operate in developing tourism. Turkey only earned $12 million from tourists in 1963. In future Israeli ships will include Turkish ports in their services from Haifa to Europe.

Turkey will also join Israel in sending experts to a number of Asian and Latin American countries where Israeli technicians are already working.

Along with economic co-operation, the Turks are now emphasizing political rapprochement on every occasion. The recent visit of a mission from the Israeli Military Academy was given prominence and the same publicity was accorded to the Israeli planning mission.

Two Israeli Cabinet Ministers, Moshe Dayan, the minister of Agriculture, and Joseph Almogy, the Minister of Housing are expected to visit Turkey soon.

With the deeper involvement of Egypt and other Arab states in the Soviet sphere of influence, Turkey and Israel have found themselves on the same side of the fence by force of political circumstances.

The comment to me by Ali Ihsan Gogus, the Turkish Minister of the Press, in Izmir last month is a portent. He said: "Many problems had to be overcome before the present state of relations was reached, but no insoluble problem exists between the two countries."

Israeli conclaves

Twenty - four international gatherings, devoted to science, religion, education and other subjects, will be held in Israel this year. They will be attended by some 15,000 delegates from all over the world.

ONCE A FLOURISHING COMMUNITY RHODES JEWS HAVE DWINDLED TO 37

The once flourishing 4,000-strong Jewish community of the island of Rhodes in the Dodecanese (Aegean Sea) has now dwindled to 37, according to Morris Soriano, its president.

Out of the 37 members of the congregation fewer then 15 are natives of the island. The others settled here after the war. They are either refugees from Egypt or Greek Jews from Thessaly who remained homeless after the earthquakes at Volos in 1954.

Mr. Soriano told me that the Rhodes Jewish community has restored the oldest of the four pre-war synagogues destroyed during the enemy occupation. It was built by the first Jews to settle in the island about the eighteenth century.

The funds for the restoration were provided by the state organization administering in Rhodes the heirless property of victims of Nazism. Rhodes is not included in the administrative area of the O.P.A.I.E. organization, which under the supervision of the Central Council of the Jewish Communities of Greece, is in charge of the heirless assets returned to Greek Jewry by the Greek government after the war.

SELF SUPPORTING

The restoration of the synagogue cost 200,000 drachmas (about $7,200). It was met thanks to the interest of the Nomarch (Prefect) of Rhodes, Andreas Joannou, who has been a friend to the island's Jewish community. Mr. Joannou has now been transferred to another post in Greece, and before his departure, the board of the Rhodes community expressed its gratitude to him for the understanding he had always shown in helping to settle their difficulties.

The Rhodes community, which is administered by a Board of four members is perhaps the only one in the Greek area of administration to be self-supporting. It has never received any aid from the Central Council of the Jewish Communities in Greece, the Claims Conference or the American Joint Distribution Committee.

Its normal expenditure is covered by the contribution of wealthy Jews who left the island to settle in Argentina, Rhodesia, Italy and other countries. Yet the congregation is without a rabbi. One is invited to fly over from Athens to officiate at special ceremonies.

Nevertheless the Board has decided to erect a memorial in the local Jewish cemetery to more than 2,000 island victims of the Nazi persecution, Mr. Soriano told me.

Out of the original 4,000 Jews on the island, only 2,500 were still there in 1944 and no more than 250 were saved in that year from deportation to Auschwitz. Most of these 250 are now living in Israel or other countries. Other island Jews escaped to the Anatolian coast of Turkey because of the racial laws of the Mussolini administration.

(Rhodes was taken by Italy from Turkey in 1912. Under the Allied peace treaty with Italy in 1947 Rhodes and the other Dodecanese Islands were awarded to Greece. During the war Dodecanese representatives formally declared union with Greece).

ENROUTE

By RUTHIE

Nu, we're off at last. And if you haven't guessed by now we're on our way to Israel, then I don't know what. After all, where does a good Jew go? Naturally, to Eretz Israel. After all, why should my family be different from a couple million other people? We also are entitled to see the Holy Land.

Right now we're about twenty minutes from Lydda Airport. And after almost fifteen hours of traveling, I'm already a mayvin (connoisseur).

Our plane was scheduled to leave Kennedy Airport at nine in the evening. We took off at ten, Jewish time. But that didn't matter. We had choice seats up front and the belated start gave us plenty of time to size up everybody coming on.

Finally we were asked to fasten our seat belts, the engine started and, before long, we were zooming up.

There was a time, though, when I felt butterflies in the pit of my stomach. That was when we were asked to keep our belts fastened. For awhile we flew in a thunderstorm area. From time to time you could see quick flashes of lightening.

But then I thought of my friend Shloimy (his name is Sidney, but everybody calls him Shloimy). I hoped he was right.

During the Great War (World War II not I), Shloimy was a big shot in the air force. And he told me once that a plane was the safest place to be in during a storm because it's insulated. So that consoled me. Anyway, a brayra (alternative) I had? If he was right, good; if not, I vowed I would haunt him.

Well, it turned out Shloimy was right. At about eleven, we were flying smoothly and settling down for supper.

Supper? But we ate, even if it was at five o'clock.

So what! We were on a pleasure trip; let's be daring. We'd eat another supper.

Let me tell you something, the food — a full-course flaishig (meat) meal — was excellent, if for no other reason but that I didn't have to prepare it or do the dishes afterwards.

We finished eating by midnight. But who could sleep on a full stomach? So Yenta Qvetch (me) decided to walk up and down the plane. (Listen, if you're going to be in the company of the same people for so many hours, you may as well know who they are.)

A few seats away sat a very nice lady. She too likes to talk, so we got along famously. Our husbands couldn't tell us to shut up. Mine was nodding, half asleep; hers was snoring with his mouth wide open.

She told me she lives in the Bronx, New York, and she was on her way to Israel to bring home her daughter who was there a year, studying.

At the airport a lady from someplace in Canada approached her. Would she (my newly acquired friend) please look after her two children, a boy of ten and a girl of eight. They would be met in Israel by their grand-mother.

Nu, nu, did she have a time! The little boy threw up twelve times. Once it was thought he had appendicitis. But they eventually made it.

I also met a lady from Chomedey, a suburb of Montreal. She was going to Israel with her entire family. And all the time she was concerned about her father. He had just recovered from a heart attack, and she was worried because he was sitting and enjoying himself. He was supposed to be asleep.

Then, all of a sudden, we had some excitement. A woman fainted. (I never found out the reason and Ned swears that's what keeps me awake nights.) The stewards were busy with the oxygen mask, and among 120 passengers there wasn't a doctor on the plane. It certainly was lebbadick (lively). But she rallied, thank goodness.

At last everyone began settling down for the night. But that was shortlived. You see, we didn't consider the time element. We were midway to Paris; New York time was a couple of hours behind. So, at 2:30 a.m. (our time), we were offered a snack.

Okay. That you could always take. To heck with the calories. How many times do you have such a holiday anyway?

Well, I never believed the day would ever come when I couldn't look something to eat in the face. And that's just what happened.

At 5:30 a.m., we were served breakfast. The plane was nearing Paris, which was six hours ahead.

Time, shmimel We were full. Genoog shoin (enough already).

However, I couldn't resist looking at what we got. So I threw one eye on the tray. Staring right up at me were two big, hot bagels with cream cheese and lox on the side, plus a steaming cup of coffee.

My conscience and I began battling:

"Ruthie, no. Think how your dresses will fit."

"But it's part of the deal."

"You'll be sorry."

"Just one bagel. I'll leave the other.

And that's exactly what I did. Believe it or not, I felt virtuous. Because for me to leave a morsel of food is something.

We stopped for awhile in Paris. As soon as I could, I made a dash for the duty free shop. Duty free, phooey! Prices there are jacked up, so what difference does it make where you buy? The bargains I saw you can get anyplace.

I could make some people drool by saying our next stop was Athens, where we did land. But, to tell the truth, the whole stay was just long enough to have a coke at a counter.

How long ago that was I can't say. For now that we're on the final lap towards our goal, I've set my watch seven hours ahead.

My biggest problem at the moment is Heather. She wants to kiss the ground when we land. And she backs up her determination by the fact that it's a tradition for anyone coming to the Holy Land to kiss the earth.

I'm more realistic about it. I keep telling her if anyone sees us kissing some dirty cement at an airport, we're liable to be put into straitjackets.

Meanwhile our destination is in sight. And my blase expression is giving way to excitement. What rings in my ears are Mama's and Papa's words: Our children should live to see what we may not.

TO SETTLE IN ISRAEL IS ONE THING; TO PIONEER THE DESERT IS ANOTHER

By Anne Sinai

The man with the courage to sell up and come to settle in Israel is still part of the eternal Jewish dream. The man with the romantic imagination to branch out and settle in the wilderness is part of the Israeli one.

Mario Weinstock, 33, did both. He came to Israel as a tourist from Buenos Aires in 1957, went back to liquidate his nickel and chrome business and returned as an immigrant. After serving in the army, he went to settle at Eilat.

He must have been driven purely by the romance of it, he reminisces, for in those days Eilat was more of a tiny desert oasis than a settled town. It had 3,000 inhabitants, but most of them still only worked there during week days, and went north to home and civilization over the week-ends. Most of Eilat's inhabitants were young men living in camps, and working as stevedores, port builders, copper miners and construction labourers.

Mario, too, lived in a camp and worked at the copper mines at Timna, 13 kilometers distant from Eilat. The pay was very good. To compensate for the blazing, dry heat, the surrounding scenery was magnificent. Facing the copper mines are the great, gaunt red pillars of Solomon, which look like castle turrets carved out of sheer rock. At Eilat one used the camp only to sleep in. One bathed in the calm Red Sea, went deep sea-fishing, floated over coral islands swarming with exquisite, multi-coloured fish.

There were men from seventy different countries working in Eilat. Mario was the first South American. Soon he was joined by a second, and together they set up house in one of the newly constructed apartment blocks — two bachelors with a stack of skin diving equipment, a guitar and a large selection of records of Latin American music to while away their free afternoons and evenings.

But Mario was not altogether as idle as all that. From the first, he recognized the possibilities of Eilat and decided to encourage more immigrants from South America to settle in the town. One of the first to come was Zila, a pretty girl also from the Argentine, who was working as a laboratory assistant in Tel-Aviv and whom he met while on a visit to his parents up north.

He convinced Zila that their common future lay in Eilat. And so they married. Today they have two small daughters. Zila works at the local hospital and says she would not exchange Eilat for any other town in Israel.

Mario is now the branch manager of the National Insurance Fund. In the last seven years, he has watched Eilat grow from a semi-permanent camp into a town containing first class hotels for foreign tourists, new shopping centres, elegant patio houses and humming factories. He is also head of the Latin American Settlers Association at Eilat. Since his own pioneering days, 75 families and 30 bachelors from South America have come to settle there. They form a Latin American contingent that lends colour and charm to Eilat's population.

Whenever new Latin American settlers arrive, Mario helps them through the formalities of getting housing and work. He gives his time, advice, and heart to their problems. He points with pride to the way they have settled and become part of the town. The young men have landed good jobs at the copper mines or at the hotels. One group, former salesmen from the Argentine who had never done any physical work before, are now among the port's crack and highly paid stevedores.

But Mario is dead set against minimizing the difficulties of settling in Eilat. He points out that men over fifty may find the climate trying. It is dry and warm in winter, which is fine, but extremely hot in summer, although Eilatis prefer this to the humidity in Tel Aviv or Buenos Aires. Mario also points out that many immigrants must face the possibility of having to change occupation. Former salesmen from the Argentine have become waiters in Eilat's hotels; one former shopkeeper is now a hotel barman; another is in charge of a hotel grill.

Young men find the going easier. If they have trades, Eilat, which is over hungry for man-power, absorbs them overnight.

One mechanic has now opened a machine repair shop and does good business. Another is the manager of a workshop for semi-precious stones. Young people without trades are also snapped up and taught skills. One, for example, was trained to work as a motor mechanic and has now started his own garage. There is a great demand at Eilat for electricians, building workers, lathe operators, technicians, locksmiths and other tradesmen.

This does not imply that older men with means cannot open business. On the contrary, one of Eilat's smartest gift shops is owned by a South American immigrant. The most successful butcher shop in town belongs to a former South Amerian who is over sixty. His wife helps him run the business and they both feel fine.

Socially, the South Americans have their own club, where they arrange parties, lectures, functions, play chess etc. They have also organized Hebrew classes which meet each time in a different home. As a result of this well organized group life, the South American immigrants at Eilat have succeeded in adapting themselves much more quickly and smoothly. Of all the families who came to Eilat only a handful have left.

Henry Grossinger Is Dead at 76; Operator of Resort in Catskills

FROM THE NEW YORK TIMES

Harry Grossinger, the man behind the scenes at one of the world's largest and best known resort hotels, Grossinger's of Sullivan County, died of an acute coronary thrombosis at Maimonides Hospital here. His age was 76. He had been stricken in his quarters at the hotel early in the morning.

Conducted Daily Business

In the public eye, Mr. Grossinger was obscured by his wife, Jennie, who was the official hostess at the hotel. She is an outgiving person who probably knew and called more people by their first names than any full - time politician. But intimates said it was Mr. Grossinger—who actually ran the hotel, assisted in recent years by their son Paul as general manager.

Mr. Grossinger, for instance, did the buying for the hotel kitchen, going to New York's Washington Market twice a week in his chauffeur-driven, custom — built Continental limosine to inspect the vegetables and meat that would go into Grossinger's menus.

He also supervised the building of all the additions that had been raised during the last 50 years to the original seven-room farmhouse. He continued his activities even after a severe heart attack this year had sent him to a hospital in New York for several weeks.

Mr. Grossinger, like his widow, was born in Austria, and came to this country early in the century. He was a tailor by trade and worked for a time at his craft in New York, where he and Mrs. Grossinger were married in 1912. They were third cousins and her name also was Grossinger.

Her family operated a restaurant on the Lower East Side, with her father, Selig, as chef, her mother, Malke, a waitress and Jennie as cashier. In 1914, when the father suffered a nervous breakdown, the family bought a small farm near Liberty and began taking in summer boarders. The first year there were nine and the Grossingers made a profit of $81. Harry Grossinger continued to work in New York.

The first addition (six rooms) was built in 1915, expanding the capacity to 20 guests, financed largely by Mr. Grossinger's earnings as production chief of a New York garment shop. The next year, as the hotel enterprise continued to prosper, he left New York for Sullivan County to rejoin his wife and young son.

At the last count, Grossinger's had 36 buildings on 1,200 acres of rolling land accommodating a maximum of 2,400 guests. Its gross last year was $8 million.

It has its own golf course, lake, ski slope, tennis courts, indoor and outdoor Olympic-size pools.

Grossinger's first began to gain international attention in the 1930's when Barney Ross trained there for his lightweight championship fights. Eight other world champions have trained at Grossinger's since, including Rocky Marciano, retired heavyweight champion.

Although the food is Kosher and the guests were largely Jewish in the early days, the clientele now is as varied as the activities. The Rev. Fred Gehring of Philadelphia, the "Padre of Guadalcanal," often is a guest there, as is Cardinal Spellman and Governor Rockefeller.

Israel belongs

I know there are innumerable tensions between Jews from Europe and those from Moslem countries. I find some European Jews ashamed of their Sephardi brethren, and convinced there is an unbridgable gulf between them. But I refuse to believe that these tensions outweigh the immense value of proclaiming to the world that Israel is a Middle-Eastern country; and of announcing boldly that in helping forward its Sephardi elements, while keeping all that is of value in older ways of life, it is facing exactly the same Middle-Eastern problem as Nasser in Egypt or Ben Bella in Algeria.

THE LYON'S DEN

By LEONARD LYONS

BUSINESS NOTE: Mollie Parnis and Adele Simpson, the N.Y. designers, remember Barry Goldwater when he used to come East for their showings. He came as a buyer for his family's department store in Arizona. He later brought the buyers he chose to take his place.

As a buyer, Sen. Goldwater complained — and still does — that Americans have neglected the art of selling. He makes his own test: When he visits various cities he enters a shop, asks for razor blades — then puts a $5 bill on the counter. He explains that he'll buy anything up to $5 that the salesman suggests.

Only two salesmen, he says, ever talked him into spending the full $5.

MERCHANDISE DEPT.: Goldwater's, in Arizona, recently ordered the "Lady Heritage" political handkerchiefs from the N.Y. manufacturer. The order was for 6 doz. Republican, 4 doz. Democratic.

DINING NOTE: Elizabeth Taylor, Richard Burton, producer Marty Ransohoff and screen-writer Dalton Trumbo met at the Four Seasons for a script conference on "The Sandpiper." The producer had never been to the Four Seasons, the world's most spectacular restaurant. Trumbo's son, who drives a cab for the summer, was invited. He had three fellow hackies with him.

After the introductions were made, Ransohoff said about the Four Seasons: "This has got to be a good restaurant — if taxi drivers eat here."

SOCIAL NOTE: Alexander Ince attended the 80th birthday party given for Gilbert Miller, the Broadway producer, in London last week. Ince had attended Miller's 40th birthday party in Budapest. In comparing both parties, they agreed that the girls were just as beautiful now as then. "But," said Miller, "40 years ago they were not as respectable."

SCHOOL NOTE: Ince tells of a 4-year-old boy at a kindergarten in Budapest. He was asked: "What do you hope to be when you grow up?" The boy replied: "A foreigner."

DRAMA DEPT.: Sol Hurok was introduced to Alec Guinness the other day at the Cote Basque. "Thanks for the plug," Hurok said. Guinness looked puzzled, until the impresario said that there is a reference to Hurok in the play, "Dylan." Guiness plays the title role.

"Oh, yes, of course," the star suddenly recalled. "Forgive me for not remembering, but when your name is mentioned — it comes in a scene where I'm supposed to be asleep onstage."

NEWS DEPT.: LBJ said about Sen. Goldwater's firmest supporters that they're the people who wouldn't let him into their country club.... There's a method even to the flowers used in the Actors Studio's "The Three Sisters," at the Morosco Theater. Live, cut flowers instead of artificial ones, are used at every performance.... John Held's widow has produced a limited edition of his woodcuts, now collectors' items.

Because of its current film tenant, "Zulu," the Palace Theater has had to open up balconies unused for years.... Richard Burton, incidentally, did the narration for "Zulu" without billing or fee.... Jessica Tandy and Hume Cronyn will co-star on Broadway in the Durrenmatt play, "The Physicist".... "One Potato, Two Potato," the Cannes prize movie on miscegenation, states: "The characters in this film are fictitious, but the problems are real."

JURY NOTE: A lawyer at the Trattoria told this story about a jury in Tel Aviv listening to the testimony from both plaintiff and defendant. They retired to deliberate, then returned without a verdict. The jury's foreman explained: "We don't want to mix in."

HEALTH NOTE: Frank Sinatra and Joe E. Lewis were at Shor's last Thursday night. Lewis had accompanied Sinatra to Scandinavia, but had no recollection of the day's stopover in Copenhagen.... Sinatra, concerned, asked him: "Joe, are you taking care of your diabetes?".... "Yes," Lewis replied. "I'm so careful I wouldn't even shake hands with Sugar Ray Robinson."

TRAVEL NOTE: Albert Finney sent a picture postcard from Fiji to his London agent, Philip Pearman. On the postcard Finney listed the seven major film and stage roles offered him, from "The Bible" to "Julius Caesar." After each he wrote: "No."

PRACTICAL JOKER: Hugh Troy, the author-painter who died earlier this month, was known as a practical joker. He once bought 50 copies of the morning papers for the day after the '36 election. On election night in '48 he had a late party at his home, then gave each departing guest a copy of the 1936 tabloids.

That's why subway-riders, awaiting the outcome of the Truman-Dewey race, were startled to see passengers reading papers whose headline was: "FDR BY LANDSLIDE."

Troy was 6-foot-6. He used to place quarters on top of 7-foot signs throughout the city and surprised his friends by "finding" a quarter whenever he needed one. One friend knew about one such quarter placed by Troy, and surprised him by removing it and substituting five nickels.

ALLYN ANN McLERIE TO STAR AS ELIZA

FAIR LADY OPENS AUG. 3

"My Fair Lady", one of the most successful shows of all theatrical history, opens at the Royal Alexandra Theatre August 3.

And the fair lady who will play the lead role of Eliza Doolittle, the Cockney urchin who learned how to behave like a duchess, will be played by Canadian-born Allyn Ann McLerie, who will view her native Canada again from the top of a garbage can on the Royal Alex' stage.

Playing the part of Professor Higgins, the cynical phonetics teacher, who as a wager takes on the remodelling of "a common Cockney flower girl", is Allyn Ann's husband, George Gaynes. This will be their second co-starring engagement, following their appearance together in the London hit musical "Bells are Ringing".

An outstanding success in New York, "My Fair Lady" played to 3,750,000 people, grossing $20,000,000. It then went on to London where it created an unprecedented black market ticket demand and was seen by 4,325,000 people — including many New Yorkers who couldn't get into the Broadway production. Following London, the show was seen all over the world and translated into many different languages, from Portuguese to Japanese, from Norwegian to Icelandic.

And now this musical is comng to the Royal Alexandra Theatre. "My Fair Lady" will mark yet another milestone in the eventful history of the Royal Alex' since it was taken over by Edwin Mirvish—a summer theatrical season. Three presentations will be made during the first three weeks of August, all of them running for one week only.

Satchmo at O'Keefe

GIANT OF JAZZ

Louis Armstrong, that indestructible giant of jazz, comes to Toronto on Wednesday, July 29 for a four day engagement at O'Keefe Centre. Mr. Armstrong and his All Stars will give performances at 8.30. There will be no matinees for his limited engagement. Tickets go from $2 to $4.

Louis Armstrong is "the irreplaceable hero of the very musicians who have received more votes than Louis himself in the swing magazine polls." And jazz critics are in complete accord. "Armstrong's career set the pattern for the development of American jazz", writes Leonard G. Feather in the New York Times. It is Virgil Thompson's opinion that Armstrong's "style of improvisation would seem to have combined the highest reaches of instrumental virtuosity with the most tensely disciplined melodic structure and the most spontaneous emotional expression, all of which in one man you must admit to be pretty rare." Hugh Panassie believes Armstrong to be not only "the greatest of all jazz musicians," but "one of the most extraordinary creative geniuses that all music has ever known."

Israeli Youth Symphony to tour Canada and U.S.

Three Israeli teen-agers, all of them already veteran concert artists, will be soloists with the Israel National Youth Symphony Gadna, during its two-month cultural exchange tour of the United States and Canada beginning October 1964. They include Itzhak Perlman, 18-year-old violinist, Miriam Fried, 18-year-old violinist, and Daniel Domb, 19-year-old Cellist. Conductors will be Shalom Ronly-Riklis, permanent conductor of the Gadna orchestra, and Moshe Atzmon.

The Gadna orchestra, composed of young musicians between the ages of 18 and 20, will appear under the patronage of Mrs. Golda Meir, Foreign Minister of Israel and Avraham Harman, Ambassador of Israel to the United States. The tour, part of the cultural exchange program of the America-Israel Cultural Foundation, is sponsored by the Foundation's Music Alliance and will be managed by Columbia Artists Management, Inc.

Gadna will make its New York debut on Saturday evening, October 10, in Carnegie Hall, with Itzhak Perlman as soloist and Maestro Ronly-Riklis as conductor. Among the cities to be visited by the orchestra will be Boston, Washington, D.C., Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Dayton, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee and Cleveland, and in Canada — Winnipeg, Toronto and Montreal. The tour will end in New York on November 23 with a farewell dinner and concert in the Waldorf-Astoria, sponsored by the Music Alliance.

10th ANNIVERSARY FOR WOMEN'S COLLEGE

Yeshiva University's Stern College for Women, the nation's first liberal arts and sciences college for women under Jewish auspices, will celebrate its 10th anniversary next Fall, it was announced by Dr. Samuel Belkin, president.

The year-long 1964-65 celebration will consist of symposiums, lecture series, assemblies, and other public events, Dr. Belkin said.

When the doors of Stern College for Women were first opened in 1954, 33 students composed the freshmen class. Today, 10 years later, the undergraduate school has an enrollment of over 320 students. Dr. Dan Vogel, dean of Stern College for Women, expects the incoming freshmen class, Class of '68, to number over 158 young women, bringing the entire student body to a 375 total enrollment in 1964-65.

During the 1954-1964 period, students came from Canada and 13 other countries — Mexico, Israel, South Africa, Morocco, Peru, Guatemala, Venezuela, Brazil, Argentina, France, Hungary, West Germany, and Chile.

Stern College for Women is an integral division of Yeshiva University, America's oldest and largest university under Jewish auspices, now in its 78th year.

BRIDGE IS THE ANSWER

A partial solution, at least, to Tel Aviv's growing traffic problem will come with the scheduled construction of a new bridge across the Yarkon River. The bridge is to have eight lanes and two 13-foot sidewalks.

Anti-genocide law

He stressed the fact that the Criminal Code is a great educator. One cannot legislate against hatred, but wise laws can enforce good behaviour until we are adult enough to understand and react accordingly to differences in customs and beliefs.

CONSERVATIVE "ACTION"

Eric Nielsen (PC-Yukon), quoted at length from statements made by the deputy minister of justice in 1952, and expressed the opinion that it was a waste of time to send the bill to the external affairs committee for an opinion.

The Solicitor General, J. W. MacNaught, moved (and Minister of National Health Judy LaMarsh tried to second) that the bill be referred to the standing committee on external affairs (of which Mr. Knowles is a member). Before a vote could be taken, the Hon. Gordon Churchill (PC-Winnipeg South Centre) requested that an opinon be obtained from the Department of Justice as to whether the opinion of the deputy minister of justice in 1952 still holds.

Mr. Knowles attempted to have the matter referred to the committee, saying he would welcome it, but he was brushed aside by Mr. Churchill.

A. B. Patterson (S.C.-Fraser Valley) urged great caution, but by agreeing with everything that had been said managed to make his stand none too clear.

Then Jack McIntosh (PC-Swift Current-Maple Creek) entered the debate, and by giving dictionary definitions of various words he considered appropriate, managed to take up the last minutes to the 6 o'clock deadline.

This meant that the bill drops to the bottom of the list which, at this late date, virtually ensures that it will not be brought up again this session.

NO DESPAIR

The Liberal Whip, Mr. Walker, said later in his office that while he and Mr. Klein feel disappointed and regretful they have not finished.

They were bitter that the Conservatives used the device of the 60-minute deadline for private members' bills, even after the Solicitor General had moved to refer the bill to the external affairs committee.

They considered that such a motion is the minimum Parliament should give to so important a matter. However, as the member from Swift-Current apparently doesn't consider it to be of any urgency, both he and Mr. Churchill indulged in long legal arguments which didn't come to grips with the essence of the problem.

Mr. Klein and Mr. Walker believe they have one more approach that may yet lead to the bill's being referred to the committee this session. In any case, Mr. Walker stressed that this is in no way a permanent block to the bill; its sponsors are determined to achieve protection for all Canadians.

B'nai Brith Youth Meet

Local youth advisors of the B'nai B'rith Youth Organization, including six Canadians, met at Camp B'nai B'rith, July 20 to 23, to discuss their roles as adult volunteers.

The Canadians were:

Seymour A. Aronoff, 465 Wilson Ave., Downsview, Ontario; Miss Melvina Auerbach, 4745 Queen Mary Rd., Apt. 14, Montreal Quebec; Mrs. Laura Goldstein, 1078 Mill Hill, Chomedey, Quebec; Stephen A. Lassner, 634 Westluck Ave., Montreal Quebec; Bob Levinson, 781 Mount Royal Ave., East, Montreal, Quebec; Naomi Skarf, 6735 Mountain Sights, Montreal, Quebec.

"In days when parents are more and more concerned with the character development of their teenagers, it is good that these youth advisors — part of the 1,650 adults who volunteer their services weekly to BBYO chapters in several nations — can discuss problems and plans with members of the BBYO professional staff," explained Seymour S. Cohen, BBYO Director of Program, Publications and Advisor Training.

UJA Deficit Dinner

that the Borochov Schools had 16 students during the last school year who were admitted without paying any tuition fees or on drastically reduced monthly payments. The United Jewish Welfare Fund subsidizes the tuition fees for students whose families cannot afford to pay the full cost.

Of the 16 students, six had parents who were unemployed and receiving government allowances; three came from families in which the breadwinner is chronically ill and hospitalized; two are members of large families with many dependents where earnings are barely sufficient to cover everyday needs; and three students were given special privileges because they had excellent scholastic records, but their parents could not pay the tuition because of illness.

In the other two cases, one came from a family recently arrived in Canada from Eastern Europe, and the other from a broken home.

"These students could not have received an intensive Jewish education without the subsidies of the Welfare Fund and the financial support of the entire Jewish community," Mr. Levine emphasized.

Mr. Levine said that several advance meetings have already been held and it was anticipated that the opening dinner would achieve the results anticipated by the officers of the campaign.
